

International Environmental Law & Policy

Research Assistants Needed

The Institute for Governance and Sustainable Development in Washington, D.C., is seeking law students to assist with research projects in the fields of international environmental law, governance, and sustainable development on a part-time, voluntary basis.

The Institute's chief activity is the International Network for Environmental Compliance & Enforcement (INECE), a global network dedicated to promoting the compliance and enforcement of environmental laws. More than 2,500 leading environmental enforcement practitioners worldwide participate in the INECE network. For more information about INECE please see <http://www.inece.org>.

The Institute is also affiliated with the Program on Governance and for Sustainable Development at the Bren School for Environmental Science and Management at the University of California, Santa Barbara. The Program is a multidisciplinary effort to advance the theory and practice of governance for sustainable development. Its goals are to understand the role of governance in world affairs, to enhance institutions that manage the complex interdependencies among the economic, social, and environmental dimensions of human behavior, and to strengthen governance to meet the challenges of sustainable development. For more information about the Program, please see <http://fiesta.bren.ucsb.edu/~gsd/about/about.php>.

The Institute's founder and President is Durwood Zaelke. Zaelke is the Director of the INECE Secretariat and on the faculty of American University's Washington College of Law and the Bren School of Environmental Science and Management at the University of California, Santa Barbara, where is he co-founder of the Program on Governance and Sustainable Development. He is the co-author of International Environmental Law and Policy (Foundation Press, 2002) and managing partner of the Washington, D.C., office of Zelle, Hofmann, Voelbel, Mason & Gette. Zaelke is the founder and past president of the Center for International Environmental Law.

We look for students who are intelligent, exercise good judgment, take initiative, and have stamina (as well as a sense of humor). Where possible, we are willing to assist students in arranging for independent study credit. The Institute also offers 10-week summer internships in Washington, D.C., and in Geneva, Switzerland.

To apply, please email a cover letter and resume to Scott Stone (scott@inece.org).
